

ESCAPE FROM DEATH ROW

Locked in a cage with her hands and feet fastly bound, judged, and ordered to die, at the hands of men, strapped down, here she lies, a condemned woman, waiting for the chemical of death to filter in.

After years of guarded hope, waiting through appeals, denied mercy or reprieve, the moment is now. The moment is real. Family and state witnesses watch from sheltered sidelines, as final minutes fade like the mist, when morning meets the night. The warden reads his scripted lines.

But, contrary to popular believe this woman has no fear of death or hell, because long ago, she found relief. She met Jesus, and took her first breath of new life, in a lonely prison cell. All her many sins were washed away, and she found a new inner peace. She was "born again" and though needles pierce her veins, in death, she'll find no pain, but only sweet release.

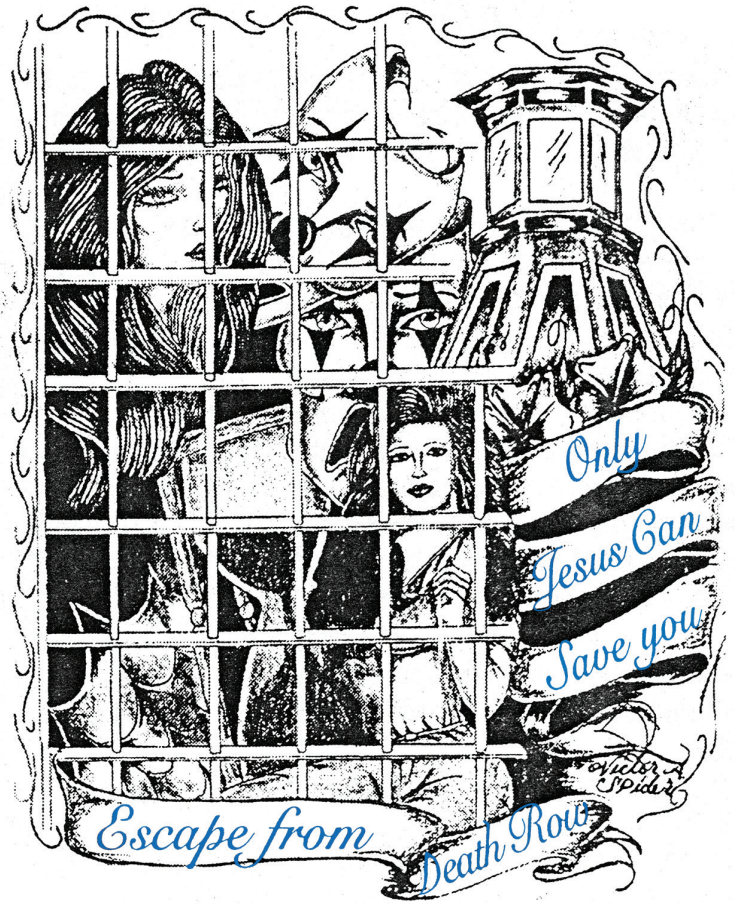

Though bound in flesh, she is free in spirit, and on wings of love, she will fly, leave this world, to pass from life to life, but she will not die. She will close her eyes, and go to sleep, but she won't go out alone.

Jesus will be at her side, holding her hand, and when she awakes, she will be at home.

Jesus said, "Today you will be with me in Paradise". (Luke, 23-4)

Dedicated to Karla Faye Tucker, executed Feb. 3, 1998 - Huntsville, Texas

ESCAPE FROM DEATH ROW

ESCAPE FROM DEATH ROW

Locked in a cage with her hands and feet fastly bound, judged, and ordered to die, at the hands of men, strapped down, here she lies, a condemned woman, waiting for the chemical of death to filter in.

After years of guarded hope, waiting through appeals, denied mercy or reprieve, the moment is now. The moment is real. Family and state witnesses watch from sheltered sidelines, as final minutes fade like the mist, when morning meets the night. The warden reads his scripted lines.

But, contrary to popular believe this woman has no fear of death or hell, because long ago, she found relief. She met Jesus, and took her first breath of new life, in a lonely prison cell. All her many sins were washed away, and she found a new inner peace. She was "born again" and though needles pierce her veins, in death, she'll find no pain, but only sweet release.

Though bound in flesh, she is free in spirit, and on wings of love, she will fly, leave this world, to pass from life to life, but she will not die. She will close her eyes, and go to sleep, but she won't go out alone.

Jesus will be at her side, holding her hand, and when she awakes, she will be at home.

Jesus said, "Today you will be with me in Paradise". (Luke, 23-4)

Dedicated to Karla Faye Tucker, executed Feb. 3, 1998 - Huntsville, Texas

ESCAPE FROM DEATH ROW